By Maria Casey

The Campus and Castletroy area in general has this term been plagued by the actions of a teenage gang calling themselves "The Metlers".

Wanted for questioning on campus in relation to the theft of a number of bikes and the break in of lockers, The Metlers are responsible for at least two of the attacks on students this term. They are also known to have vandalised the piano in the Student Centre and sprayed the toilet walls there with graffiti.

S.U. Deputy President Enda Loneragan, a member of Millford Grange Neighbourhood Watch group told an Focal how the gang have "terrified" young children in the area. "They hurl verbal abuse at able bodied people but become physical with people who are young, old or vulnerable", he said.

Up to now two of the gang have been arrested; one for assault on an elderly woman on Halloween night and another for the theft of a bicycle from the grounds of the Castletroy Park Hotel.

Three weeks ago the Metlers were banned from campus when a member of U.L. Security caught one prowling around. A list of names has been sent to the Gardai at Henry Street and to the Registrar, Mr. Leo Colgan. If caught on campus in the future, anyone named on that list will be immediately arrested.

Lecturer Tops Poll

by Cathal Kelly

University of Limerick faculty member Willie O'Dea topped the poll in Limerick East in the general election two weeks ago. Mr O'Dea is a lecturer in the Department of Law, and has been on leave since his election to the Dail. He is a Flanna Fail TD, and is currently Minister of State at the Department of Justice.

In Cork, former UL lecturer, Mr Pat Cox was elected for the Progressive Democrats. Mr Cox retained the PD seat held by Pierce Wyse, who retired from politics. Mr Cox is also an MEP.

Former Students' Union President, Mr John Ryan, failed to be elected in Limerick East, receiving 835 first preference votes. Mr Ryan was eliminated at the eighth count with 1,130 votes. Mr Ryan is a member of the Democratic Left, and was elected to Limerick Corporation in the last local elections. He was president of what was then the NIHE Students' Union in the early 1980s.

Tally's from the party activists show that Progressive Democrat Leader Mr Desmond O'Malley scored highest in the boxes in Castletroy and Monaleen, where most UL students are registered. In the Castletroy box Mr O'Malley received 139 votes, with Fine Gael Senator Mary Jackman receiving the next highest number of first preferences, 46. These figures are unofficial. SU president, Diarmuid Scully says it is difficult to assess how many of the votes in the relevant boxes were cast by students. Mr Scully pointed out that to be eligible to vote in this election, students at UL would have to have registered with the County Council in September of last year.

Strike 'Unlikely'

A strike by UL staff is unlikely, despite a vote by the largest staff union MSF in favour of industrial action two weeks ago. The staff voted in favour of action arising from a dispute over study time for a member of the administrative staff who is pursuing a BA degree at UL.

Students' Union leaders had been worried that a strike might affect the holding or grading of exams. However, staff sources indicated in week 10 that they believed a strike was unlikely and that a negotiated settlement would be found to the dispute.

The after birth of the elections

So, we've apparently just had a real watershed election. Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael have lost ten seats each (subject to that interminable recount between Ben Briscoe and Eric Byrne in Dublin South Central). Labour have swept all before them, to the extent that they seem to be the party of future. But what does it all mean?

The much-mentioned "Rainbow Coalition" seemed odds on to be our next government. But maybe not. Labour look like demanding to include Democratic Left in the Coalition; but not the PD's. Yet Fine Gael are talking to the PD's, apparently to the exclusion of Democratic Left. How will they sort this one out? The state of the country demands that we have a strong, stable, committed government; but the petty politicking of the most likely partners could end up throwing a massive spanner into the works.

If the oh-so-principled opposition parties can't manage to settle between them, then what's the deal? One would have thought they might put the interests of the country ahead of their own concerns. Yet, already, these parties are making noises about providing "principal opposition". Why? What good would this do? Fianna Fáil could, conceivably, form a minority government under the auspices of these other parties. However, the Soldiers of Destiny are in some disarray themselves, and seem to be gazing longingly at the opposition benches too.

Where would this leave us? With no government and four opposition parties. Does that make sense? Whoever does take the helm will have to steer us through some very unpopular waters. A hairshirt budget in February is all but inevitable, and spending will have to be further curbed. Do we have anyone who is prepared to eschew the populist policies of yore, and do what has to be done?

If the "Rainbow" crew can't put their differences aside, it seems that we may have that Fianna Fáil minority regime. Unlikely as it sounds, this could work. The Fianna Fáil minority Government from 1987-89 was arguably the most effective reign we've had for thirty years. That was done with the help of Fine Gael's "Tallaght Strategy", but the (rare) selflessness of that policy ultimately cost them seats. Do any of the "opposition" have the mettle to steer that course?

While stability might not be easy to come by, a Government dependent on the support of the other parties would, of necessity, have to reach consensus. This is what we need at the moment, the only problem would be, if the Government in question put the opposition's noses out of joint: TA-DA! GENERAL ELECTION! Whoever does end up in charge will have to sublimate their natural instincts for the common good. Does it seem likely? I'll put odds of 5-4 on that we'll be voting again come March, or so. Does it sound pessimistic, to you? Wake up and smell the coffee (or more aptly, other, less pleasant odours) kids, its sad but true.

MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A PROSPEROUS

SIMONSNODGRASS

Christmas Time Is Here Again

I've always wanted to write a heartwarming "faith in your fellow man" type Christmas story. A charming tale with the human spirit triumphing over great adversity. It would naturally require plenty of exuberant banter and a surfeit of alacritous characters. You will all be no doubt enthused on reading that just such a story lies in an advanced state of readiness. I present a preview here!

Plot Summary

Little girl (Shirley Temple type) gets lost in the big city on Christmas Eve. Is taken in by dirt poor but kindly family who care for her. (father Al Pacino, Mother - Sharon Stone). Much is made of the fact that they can't afford a turkey for Christmas.

After a suitable interlude little girl is reunited with her snobby parents, who are greedy and patronising (a metaphor for materialism in the 1980's). They have a change of heart on hearing how nice the disgustingly poor family treated her and invite them over for dinner.

Final scene - Both families sitting around gigantic table with slabs of turkey being dished out. The obnoxiously poor family receive presents and Sharon Stone starts to cry because she's never received a present before. The rich family are thrilled too because they've learned the true meaning of Christmas. The credits roll to the theme of Andy Williams crooning "It's a Wonderful Time of the Year".

You walk bleary eyed out onto the streets with a lilt in your step. All the way home in the car you feel a warm sense of contentment inside you. What more can anyone ask for?

ENJOY NOT DESTROY

End of Term Warning!

There was a spate of trouble after a recent gig, which very much blackened the good name of the college (and a few eyes).

If drink makes you violent may we suggest you stay at home. Anyone acting violently during the end of term, will later be dealt with by the Dispenary Board of the Gardaí, who will be taking a stronger line, so please have respect for your fellow students and College property. And Enjoy Not Destroy.

Teaching Practice Handbook Launched

by Cathal Kelly

The Students' Union launched the Teaching Practice Handbook and Diary in week ten. The book is for use by students in the College of Education who will be going out on teaching practice (TP) after the winter vacation.

SU Transition Officer, Mr Billy Kirwan, said there had been a crying need for a TP handbook for some years, and he had approached the College of Education TP Committee earlier this term with a view to publishing the booklet. Following discussions at the committee, the project was discussed at a meeting of the College's Faculty Board. Mr Jim Gleeson, head of Dept Second Level Education, reported to Faculty Board on Teaching Practice changes, including progress of the handbook project. Mr Kirwan said he had received strong support for what members of the College of Education described as an "excellent idea".

The handbook contains details of the new TP regulations, introduced by the College of Education earlier this term. The changes arose from the new ten-week TP system introduced following the Dissolution of Thomond College Act.

Up until this year, no written information was given to education students on how they would be assessed by tutors while on TP. The handbook also contains information on the new structured observation and induction week which education students complete in the first week of their placement.

Exam Venue Confusion

Substantial numbers of students missed the start of exams this week following confusion of the location of venues listed on the Examination Timetable issued by Student Services.

Porters at the reception to the PE building, the Schrödinger building, and the Schuman building reported that they had to redirect exam candidates to another of the three buildings.

The confusion arose from the similarity in the codes for exam venues in the three buildings, especially rooms on level G of the Schuman building. The codes for venues in the three venues begin with SG, SR, S1, S2, and SP.

SU Transition Officer told an Focal that he believed that the frustration many students felt at discovering their error was compounded by the realisation that their correct venue was at the far end of the campus.

Mr Kirwan went on to say he feels that following the merger of UL and TCE, the University authorities should have named the Schrödinger building the Thomond building instead of trying to "bury everything to do with Thomond College of Education".

(c) When Farmer Oak smiled, the corners of his mouth opened till they were within an unimportant distance of his ears....
